

THE LEGEND OF

Le Chang

It is said that in 1987, a humble noodle cart rolled into town pushed by a man named Chef Chang, who had one rule: never reveal the wonton recipe, not even to his own reflection.

Legend has it Chang once arm-wrestled a delivery truck driver for the last bag of rice during a snowstorm, won in under four seconds, and then split the rice with him anyway because "a hungry man is a slow customer."

The Dynamite Shrimp is rumored to be named for the time the kitchen's smoke alarm went off so dramatically during a test batch that two firefighters stayed for dinner and gave it five stars on their way out.

To this day, no one has finished a Chef's Feast for 4 solo. Several have tried. A plaque near the kitchen honors their effort, if not their judgment.

And the fortune cookies? Hand-folded by Chang's nephew, who insists every fortune is real, scientifically tested, and "basically guaranteed," which is a phrase his lawyer has asked him to stop using.

Tonight, Le Chang humbly serves its finest dishes to one very special guest: a father whose own legend — of dad jokes, grilling mishaps, and unconditional love — rivals Chang's himself.
